UK Polyamory Association

Annual Report and AGM

October 2026

ukpolyamory.org · Company number 16262003

The year at a glance

~150

people at Polyday 2026, the UK's leading polyamory conference, revived with UKPA support

20+

community groups in our organisers' network, representing 1,000+ members

10 countries in the International Polyamory Alliance, of which the UKPA is a founding member

1st

dedicated national survey of UK attitudes to polyamory, now in design

1 About the UKPA

The UK Polyamory Association is the United Kingdom's non-profit advocacy organisation for polyamorous people. Our mission is to educate the public, support the broad and diverse polyamorous community in the UK, and work towards social and legal change.

We take our lead from established campaigning organisations such as Stonewall. Our work includes:

- gathering and publishing statistics on polyamory in the UK
- producing educational materials about polyamory
- bringing together and supporting the UK's in-person and online polyamory communities
- tracking how polyamory is portrayed in the media
- working with employers to develop polyamory-inclusive HR policies
- researching the changes to UK law needed to support polyamorous families

History and governance

The UKPA was founded in 2022 and relaunched in late 2024 as a volunteer-led organisation with a strong focus on community support. In 2025 we incorporated as a non-profit limited company, registered at Companies House (company number 16262003). Our Articles of Association commit us to spending 100% of the money we raise on supporting the polyamorous community in the UK.

2 Our trustees

Emily Payne

TRUSTEE

Emily founded the Northamptonshire polyamory and ENM group in 2015 and has run regular meetups ever since, alongside moderating a number of online polyamory communities. She brings previous board experience from the Bewley Charitable Trust and is a current trustee of The Harry Payne Fund. Out as polyamorous since 2012, she is passionate about raising awareness of non-monogamy across the UK.

Eunice Hung

TRUSTEE

Eunice has been active in queer and polyamorous activist spaces since coming out in 2009, and has spent around a decade in organising roles including the London Polyamory Meetup Group, the UK Polyamory Discord server and Polyday. She has been interviewed about polyamory on television and radio, and works as an author, podcaster, editor, project manager and psychotherapist.

David Durant

COORDINATOR

David is a civic technologist who has spent two decades helping to build communities such as UKGovCamp, One Team Gov and TransformGov Talks while leading digital teams across the public sector. Poly since his teens, he coordinates the UKPA's day-to-day work and volunteer programme.

3 Membership and finances

Membership

The UKPA is a membership organisation, with a standard fee of £5 a month. At the time of writing we have 13 members. Growing our membership will remain a major focus over the next 12 months.

Finances

Over the past 12 months the UKPA received approximately £200 in income from membership fees and merchandise sales. This is lower than our current membership might suggest, as a number of members joined only recently. In line with our Articles of Association, all of this will be spent on supporting the UK polyamorous community — most likely on the cost of our national survey (see section 7).

4 Our community

Connecting community organisers

The UKPA convenes a growing network of polyamory community organisers from across the UK. Our WhatsApp groups bring together representatives of more than 20 local and online groups, which between them have over 1,000 members.

Community visits

Over the past year, UKPA representatives have visited community meetups in person in Bristol, the East of England and Southampton, and joined the Yorkshire group online.

5 Events

This year the UKPA supported volunteers and community members to deliver two significant events.

Polyday 2026

The UKPA stall at Polyday 2026

After a pause of several years, Polyday — the UK's leading polyamory conference — returned in 2026 with the help of the UKPA and its volunteers. Around 150 people attended the all-day event, which ran multiple speaker tracks. It brought activists and community organisers together to share their work, and gave people new to polyamory a welcoming place to learn more.

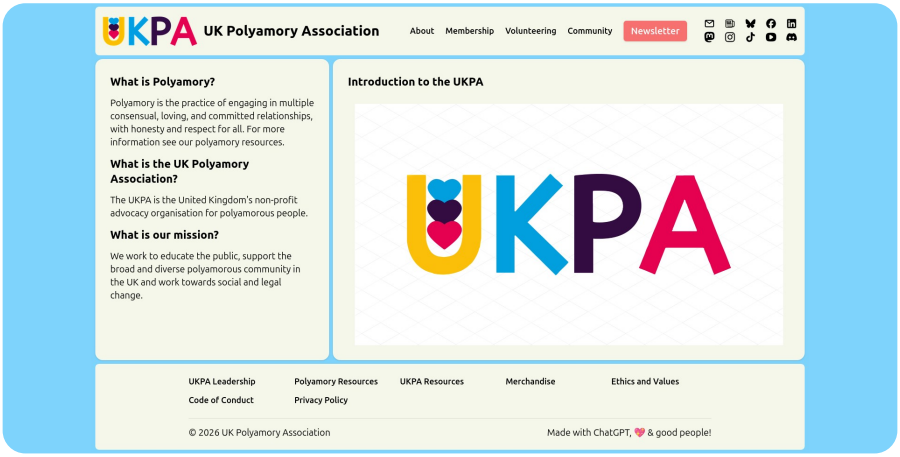

Polyday also proved a launchpad for our volunteer programme: three of our newest workstreams (section 7) began with conversations there.

Week of Visibility for Non-Monogamy

The Week of Visibility for Non-Monogamy is held every July and organised by OPEN (the Organization for Polyamory and Ethical Non-monogamy), the US counterpart to the UKPA. This year the UKPA helped coordinate a well-attended meetup in Regent's Park as part of the week.

6 Communications

Website

The ukpolyamory.org homepage

Our website, ukpolyamory.org, is regularly updated and received an average of around 20 unique visitors a day over the past year.

Social media, blog and newsletter

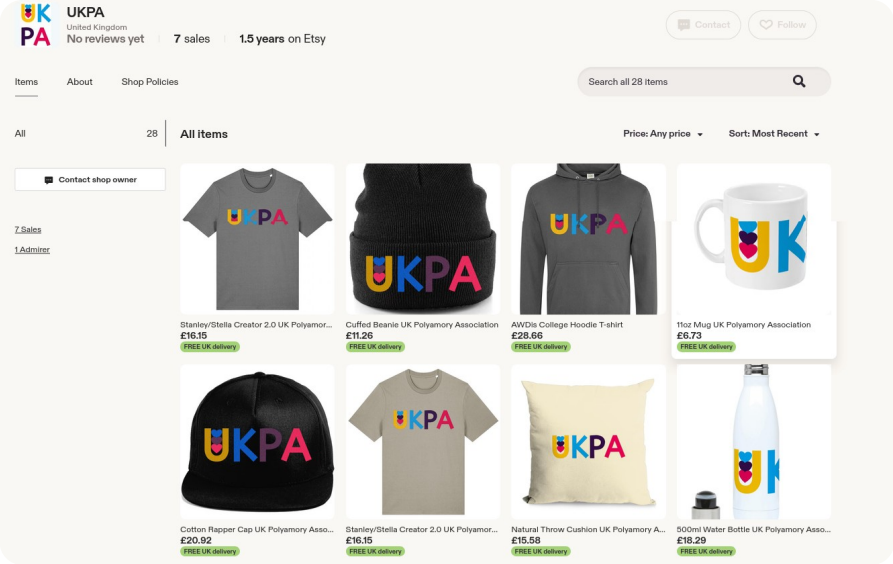

We post daily on Bluesky (~250 followers), Facebook (~50), LinkedIn (~5) and Mastodon (~5). Each month we publish an update on our work on our Medium blog and send a newsletter to around 50 subscribers.

Research articles

In the run-up to Polyday we published two articles drawing on YouGov polling data about polyamory:

- How Britain Feels About Polyamory
- Are Over a Million UK Adults Polyamorous?

Merchandise

The UKPA shop on Etsy

Our Etsy shop sells UKPA-branded clothing, mugs, bottles and homeware. We made around 10 sales over the past year, with all proceeds going back into our work.

7 Volunteer workstreams

Much of the UKPA's most important work this year has been done by our volunteers, and we are hugely grateful for their time and expertise. Seven workstreams are now under way.

National polyamory survey

This is potentially our most significant workstream. Working with professional survey designers, we are developing the UK's first national general-population survey dedicated entirely to polyamory. There have been valuable community surveys, and polyamory questions have appeared in wider polling (see section 6), but we believe this will be the first to record in detail both the UK public's experience of polyamory and its attitudes towards it. We intend to repeat the survey at least annually.

Its findings will underpin much of our other work, including conversations with employers, the media, fellow campaigning organisations and — above all — government.

Mental health resources

Our most advanced workstream. We will shortly publish our first guide for UK mental health practitioners on supporting clients in polyamorous relationships. It has been written by a sub-group of volunteer therapists who specialise in queer and polyamorous clients, and peer-reviewed by fellow practitioners. Further guides will follow, and we hope in time to advise the UK bodies that train and accredit mental health professionals.

NHS resources

Building on the mental health work, we are forming a group of volunteers with wider NHS experience to produce similar materials for doctors, nurses and other health professionals.

Media relations

We are developing a polyamory media pack for UK journalists, and positioning the UKPA as a go-to source for comment on stories involving polyamory.

Starting a local group

Following an excellent session at Polyday, one of the UK's local community organisers is working with us on resources to help people start polyamory support groups in their own areas.

Educational resources

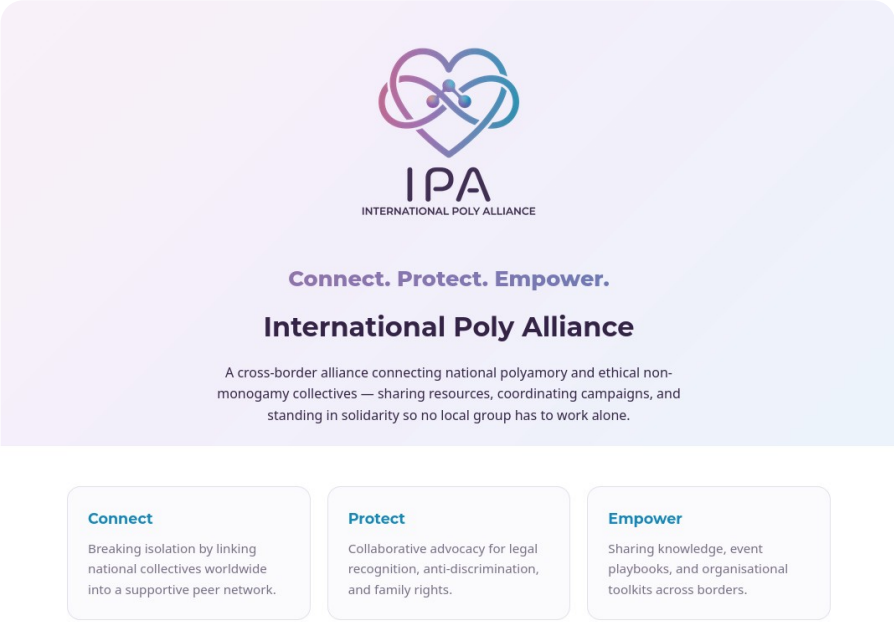

Our newest workstream, also born out of connections made at Polyday. Taking inspiration from the educational resources produced by Humanists UK, we aim to create materials tailored to different age groups and aligned with the National Curriculum.

Law and policy

One of the most popular sessions at Polyday explored how UK law could better reflect the lived experience of people in non-traditional families. Several attendees have since volunteered to continue this work with the session leader and the UKPA. We know this is likely to be decades of work, but — inspired by the history of LGBTQ+ activism — we have begun analysing the relevant legislation and planning how to build political influence.

8 Partnerships and policy

International Polyamory Alliance

The International Poly Alliance

The UKPA is a founding member of the International Polyamory Alliance, a new network supporting national polyamory organisations. It currently has representatives from Brazil, Canada, Denmark, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Ukraine, the UK and the USA.

2031 Census

We have met several times with the Office for National Statistics team working on the 2031 Census, with the aim of securing one or more questions on non-traditional family structures.

Government consultation on weddings law

We submitted a formal response to the government consultation Tying the Knot: Reforming Weddings Law in England and Wales.

Humanists UK

We have had a number of productive conversations with Humanists UK, learning from their work on communications, community engagement and educational outreach.

Political parties

We have also spoken with advisers to the Green Party and the Liberal Democrats about how we can support their efforts to raise the profile of non-traditional families within their parties.

9 Our plans for the next 12 months

Grow our membership and volunteer base

More members and volunteers are essential to sustaining our current work and taking on more.

Expand our community network

Our research suggests there are at least 20 more polyamory communities in the UK we have yet to connect with.

Keep visiting communities

We will continue to meet as many local groups as we can, both in person and online.

Polyday, the Week of Visibility — and Pride

We will support both the Week of Visibility and Polyday 2027, and we are determined to bring polyamorous people from across the UK together at Pride, which we were sorry to miss this year.

Launch the national survey

We will run the first national polyamory survey, and use its findings to approach some of the UK's largest employers — such as the Civil Service and Royal Mail — about adding polyamory-related questions to their staff surveys.

Strengthen international links

We will help the International Polyamory Alliance grow as it welcomes new members and launches its own volunteer-led programmes to support national groups and influence international bodies.

Begin the long work on legislation

We will build our understanding of what it will take to update UK law to support people in polyamorous and other non-traditional families.

Thank you

It has been a busy and demanding year for the trustees and volunteers of the UK Polyamory Association, all of whom give their time unpaid. We are deeply grateful to everyone who has contributed, and we look forward to building on this progress in the year ahead.

Emily Payne, Eunice Hung and David Durant